The Garden Helper

Every Saturday morning, Jayden walked to his grandmother's house to help her in the garden. His grandmother grew tomatoes, carrots, and sunflowers along the back fence. Jayden liked pulling weeds the best, because he could see how much neater the garden looked when he finished.

One Saturday, Jayden noticed that the tomato plants looked droopy and pale. He asked his grandmother what was wrong. She smiled and explained that the plants needed more water during the hot summer months. Together, they filled a large watering can and gave each plant a long drink.

The next Saturday, Jayden ran straight to the tomato plants. To his delight, the leaves were green and standing tall again. Small yellow flowers had even begun to bloom. His grandmother told him that soon those flowers would turn into juicy red tomatoes.

"You have a green thumb, Jayden," she said, patting him on the shoulder. Jayden did not know exactly what that meant, but he could tell it was a compliment. From then on, he asked to visit the garden every single week, rain or shine.
